A Note from Police Chief Ron Davis

It has come to my attention that an alarm company by the name of American Alarm Co, Inc has been going door to door soliciting sales of alarm systems. At least one of the sales persons has intentionally or unintentionally misrepresented several facts related to alarms in general. To help you make an informed decision I am providing some information related to American Alarm Co, Inc specifically and about the alarm industry in general. Keep in mind that in no way am I endorsing or condemning any one company that provides alarm services, these are only the facts as I know them.

First, no alarm company has a permit to go door to door soliciting alarm sales in Addison. If you are approached, ask to see their permit. If they don't have one or it appears improper call the police immediately. Second, at least one sales representative from American Alarm Co, Inc has implied that sometime in the summer if your existing alarm operates off of a land phone line that it will stop working as all alarms will convert to digital / wireless technology. According to the National Burglar & Fire Alarm Association (NBFAA), a professional organization dedicated to promoting professional ethics and standards among alarm companies, this is not true. In addition, mention was made by a sales representative that there have been several false alarms in some of our Addison homes and that the homeowners could face $50 fines. Yes, we have false alarms and yes if you have more than five false alarms in a year you will be fined, but not for anything less than five.

The American Alarm Co, Inc has a 263 area code which is in North Carolina. Nothing unusual or wrong about an out of state firm working in Texas; however, the NBFAA does not list them as a member of their organization. That said, there are at least two other alarm companies that go by a name very similar to American Alarm Co, Inc that are members of the NBFAA, one of these companies is local. I have included two pamphlets provided by the NBFAA that provides excellent information on how to select an alarm company. I urge you to read them.

On the subject of alarms in general you often hear in the news about alarm companies and police departments at odds over false alarms, this is true; however, it is a love-hate relationship. When an alarm system works properly they are a great aid to law enforcement. Little is more satisfying to a police officer than to catch a real live burglar and alarms can play a big role in making that happen. Fact is a properly installed and monitored alarm system can be an important tool to help protect your property and family. The homeowner does have a responsibility to see that it is maintained and to use it properly. False alarms happen but excessive false alarms to one location tie up a tremendous amount of police resources and waste your tax dollars.

In closing I have shared with you information that I hope you will find useful should you decide to buy an alarm system or upgrade your current system. Again, I am not advocating buying or not buying an alarm system. I will be out next week so it will be a couple of weeks till I write again.

Severe Weather

During the thunderstorms we experienced Thursday morning some of you may have been unfortunate enough to have been stuck on Belt Line during the times the signal lights were knocked out. I received a couple of calls from people asking why we had officers at an intersection sitting in their cars not directing traffic when it was not raining particularly hard at the moment they passed by, good question. We did direct traffic and block a high water crossing for most of the morning. Facilitating traffic by working downed intersections is something we do frequently. The factors that we consider when deciding to work an intersection is the size of the intersection and do we have enough manpower to do it safely. Since all of our Belt Line intersections are large it takes more than one person to work them. Depending on our call load and the fact that sometimes we may have two or three intersections to work simultaneously we may not be able to get to some of them. Another factor is weather. If we have heavy rain like we had this morning our policy is that we will not direct traffic unless there is a threat of injury to the public; traffic jams as aggravating as they are work themselves out eventually, one of our officers getting run over is a different story. Directing traffic in good weather much less bad is dangerous enough. In the circumstance mentioned above the lighting strike detection equipment which we have in dispatch was indicating numerous cloud to ground lighting strikes in the immediate area hence the officers were advised to remain in their cars. Once I explained the reason to the people who had called in they understood. If you see us doing something that doesn't seem to make sense to you please call me. You may or may not agree with our reason but once you know why then you can decide if we made the right decision. Fact is sometimes we don't and we need to know that too!
